

I am currently chair of the emergency weather captioning task force working with local TV stations in improving captioning of emergency weather warnings. However, we've come across a question which needs to be addressed. If and when a rural town (county) receives weather warning from the NOAA who is responsible for assuring broadcasted emergency warning information is both visually and aurally accessible? Please advise. Thank you.